GED passing score

The new GED program brought a new scoring system as well. With the new tests you are required to produce at least 150 (on a scale 100-200 points) points to pass that section. As there are 4 testing sections, you must score no less than 600 points in total, and there is no averaging! An overall score of 720 and upward (out of a maximum of 800 points) will bring you a GED Honors Diploma. Get optimally prepared real fast, and use our free GED video lessons. You can prepare and schedule one tests at a time. When you're all set, you take that test and if you pass, you can move on to the next part. Your scores are valid for two years.

The new GED exam

GED instructors and educational officials initially were worried that many older adults, as they are less familiar with working on a computer, could have considerable difficulty sitting for the new GED exam, but recent research by GED reveals that the new computer-based GED exam shows a passing rate of 88 %, as opposed to 71% for the former paper-and-pencil GED exam. What is also an improvement is that students now can see their test results right after sitting for the GED exam, In former days they had to wait more than two week to learn how they did.

Can I take the GED exam online?

The answer to this question is sadly enough still no. The new GED exam became entirely “digitalized”, but if you want to earn your GED diploma you must take all four tests at a state-approved GED testing site. Internet sites that tell a different story are fraudulent.

GED alternatives – TASC and HiSET

California also lets its residents (or rather the test centers) the option to take another high school equivalency assessment option, and has welcomed the TASC and the HiSET examinations. These two alternatives are also available on paper (while the new GED exam is only available computer-based), and they are much cheaper than the new GED exam. TASC and HiSET include five tests as the Literacy section is split up in a reading and a writing test.

GED and the economy

The GED program was at first introduced by the United States War Dept. during the 1940's to help military employees with obtaining additional education and better employment options. There are still around 40 million men and women in the U.S. who, for whatever reason, never completed high school, and the GED program is mainly meant for them. Completing the GED tests successfully will lead to improved professional possibilities and open doors of colleges and universities. Each year, more than half a million people pass the GED examination, and you could very well be one of them. Why don't you check out as well our post on the best GED prep books.
